Growing Beginning Farmers & Ranchers in Wyoming

2022 - 2024 Galloway Ranch

Every summer, as we welcome interns to Galloway Ranch, I am reminded of the curiosity they bring. For many, this is their first hands-on experience with ranching and farming. Interns like Chloe, Ronnie, and Dani arrive eager to learn, each bringing unique strengths that make mentoring both rewarding and humbling.

The ranch offers countless lessons. Long days of fencing, haying, and irrigating instill resilience, while tasks like vaccinating calves teach the importance of livestock health. Ronnie and Dani embraced challenges like operating new equipment, while Chloe's growing confidence during cattle work reflected her commitment.

We emphasize sustainable practices, teaching interns about rotational grazing and plant identification to foster an understanding of the balance between livestock and land. Mechanical skills, from driving tractors to equipment maintenance, are equally vital, as are lessons in budgeting, marketing, and record-keeping—the backbone of any agricultural operation.

Field trips and workshops expose interns to innovations like digital grazing tools and sustainable crop practices, expanding their horizons and linking them to the broader agricultural community.

By the end of their ten weeks, interns leave with more than just knowledge—they gain a profound appreciation for the land and the effort required to steward it. For us, sharing this lifestyle is a privilege. Watching their growth reaffirms our hope that this experience serves as a foundation for their future in agriculture.
